Overview

Johns Hopkins University ranks 144 out of 257 schools in the 2026 College Free Speech Rankings with a score of 57, an F speech climate grade. The university fired lecturer Tavish Forsyth, which triggered a three-point penalty. On the policy front, Hopkins did adopt institutional neutrality, slightly boosting its score, but still earns a “yellow light” Spotlight rating that continues to weigh it down.

Students paint a bleak picture. Hopkins places in the bottom 50 for “Comfort Expressing Ideas” and in the bottom 25 for perceived “Administrative Support” — two areas that together suggest a campus uneasy about open dialogue and unconvinced of administrative backing for free speech. No area lands in the top 50.

To improve, Hopkins could overhaul its remaining restrictive speech codes to earn a “green light” Spotlight rating and follow its new neutrality pledge with clear, consistent support for faculty and student expression.
